Keep it light and keep it lively is the motto of sprightly Sally Ann Howland, 19. Not having fun is not being alive, so far as she believes.

BIRTHDAY BASH!

Monica, 24, has just had a birthday. And some of the wildest people in her town, Alton Falls, Maine, attended the party last night. "Wow!" Monica remembers. "I could hardly believe it. A few of my close friends threw a surprise birthday party for me."

"They invited their friends, and their friends invited other people, until about 200 people showed up! And some of them were too much! Among the guests were a man with a shaven head, rimless glasses he wore with a chain attached to his ears, and a mustache and goatee. He sat there staring at walls all evening, without saying a word!" Monica says she also recalls a young girl who came in alone, danced a circle around the room, and each time she went around she would take off another piece of clothing. "All in all, it was quite a party."

*Norma Carol, 19, is one of the
down home girls.*

*Yes, she's from below
the old Mason-Dixon line.
Way down South. Norma
Carol comes from Long Bend,
Mississippi, and she's proud of it.
"I like the South," she says.*

"Down South we've got tradition. We've got a heritage, you know what I mean?" We tried not to get her upset with Yankee defensiveness.

"DOWN HOME GIRL"

Norma Carol is in New York on business. She works for her father in his cotton plantation enterprises. "We own a lot of acres of cotton land," she says, with a smile. "It took me over a week to walk from one end to the other once, when I was a little 'un." Norma Carol is trying to drum up business with manufacturers to buy her "daddy's" cotton. A few business dinners and luncheons a week, and her old man's got a few new contracts. "I must be a good saleswoman or something," she says.

Bonnie, 22, is a movie star, of sorts. She works in the experimental, avant garde films of the French director; Jean-Jacques Cousteau. Of all the actors and actresses that have appeared in his films, Bonnie Stewart has had the most acclaim. She is an exceptionally fine actress, and, as you can see, she has all the other things it takes to make it big on the country's movie screens.

It takes money to do all of this. Some of the "staged" commercials are given quite an elaborate setting. Many advertisers were reluctant to try this new method of selling for fear that the expense would not be worth the amount of people they might reach, but the company Eileen works for had the courage, and they're beginning to find that it does pay off. At least, if you've got a model like Eileen to do your selling for you. We asked her how she felt about appearing in front of all those people. "I was a bit nervous at first," she says. "But after a while I got used to it. It's a job like any other. The important thing is to sell the sponsor's product."

"I like to show my date a good time," says Sandra, "and guys want a girl with lots of bounce. That's why I've got to take a cat-nap now—so I'll be wide-awake and ready to swing tonight."
